The Ball Family

A review of the origins of our Loyalist ancestors informs us that the Great Migration had come to America after 1700. While the arrival of Dutch and New England arrival were before that year, the Palatine German and soldiers in British times came afterward. A few families had arrived, particularly in New England, shortly after the origin of the Plymouth Colony. One such was the Ball family who settled in Watertown, Mass. as early as 16. Here settled John Ball, and after him came John after John for six generations to 1730. This last John's children included a James a Samuel and a Benjamin. The son James became a pioneer settler in Newfane in 1751, a town a short distance northwest of Brattleboro. In 1771, his brother Samuel became a settler as did a Jacob, evidently son of their brother Benjamin.

In the 1760 there were four siblings Shadrach b 1760, Solomon b 1761, Jacob b. 1762 and a sister Susannah b 1764. These four children, all born in Newfane, were children of one of these brothers. Which one has not been clearly defined. It is known, however, that their mother was Deborah said to have the surname of Belknap. Proof of their parentage is still uncertain.

When the Revolutionary War broke out, and General Burgoyne crossed Lake Champlain aimed on quelling the rebellion, Shadrach and Solomon became members of Col John Peters' Queens Loyal Rangers. There is ample evidence of their service which included that of Secret Service carrying messages between Quebec and the Vermont Authorities. Jacob, being under age, did not join his brothers until about 1778. All three brothers became soldiers in Jessup's Loyal Rangers. The daughter, Susannah, born 1762, married Amos Martin, who had brief period of service in Vermont. She finally followed the brothers to St. John Quebec, as Loyalists.

After the war, Shadrach and Solomon eventually settled in the Bay of Quinte area, Shadrach in Stormont and Solomon in Ernestown. Jacob married and settled on North Hero Island, in Lake Champlain, considering that he was in British Territory. Amos and Susannah also settled on
